

your specific birth meditations

Tips for reading this:

- Read slowly and calmly
- Pause during surges
- Match their voice to the birthing person's breathing
- Maintain eye contact or gentle touch if welcomed

Helpful physical cues while reading:

- Slow stroking on the back
- Hip squeeze during surges
- Holding hands
- Gentle forehead or hair strokes

early labour meditation

Begin by finding a comfortable position.

You might be resting in bed, leaning into pillows, sitting on a birth ball, or swaying gently.

Allow your eyes to close.

Take a slow breath in through your nose.

And release it slowly through your mouth.

Pause.

Another slow breath in.

And a long, gentle breath out.

There is no rush.

Your body is beginning the work of birth in its own rhythm.

Early labour is a time of preparation.

A time for calm.

A time for conserving energy.

Pause.

Imagine each surge as a gentle wave rolling toward the shore.

Each wave building slowly.

Reaching its peak.

Then softly fading away.

Pause.

You ride each wave with your breath.

Breathing in calm.

Breathing out softness.

Pause.

Allow your jaw to soften.

Your shoulders to relax.

early labour meditation

Your hands to become heavy and loose.

The softer your body becomes, the easier birth flows.

Pause.

Now bring your attention to your womb.

Your powerful womb muscle working gently and rhythmically.

Each surge helping your cervix soften and open.

Making space for your baby.

Pause.

Imagine your cervix like a flower slowly blooming.

Petal by petal.

Opening naturally.

Effortlessly.

Pause.

You do not need to force anything.

Your body knows what to do.

Your baby knows what to do.

Pause.

Between each surge there is rest.

These moments of rest allow your body to recharge.

Your baby to settle.

Your mind to stay calm.

Pause.

With every surge repeat silently:

This wave is bringing my baby closer.

Pause.

I breathe in calm.

I breathe out tension.

Pause.

early labour meditation

My body knows how to birth.

Pause.

Your breath remains slow and steady.

Deep inhale.

Long, relaxed exhale.

Pause.

Allow your hips to stay loose.

Your pelvis soft and open.

Imagine your baby gently moving down with each wave.

Guided by your body.

Supported by gravity.

Pause.

You are safe.

You are capable.

Your body is working beautifully.

Pause.

Take another deep breath.

Feel the calm spreading through your body.

Wave by wave.

Breath by breath.

Your birth is unfolding exactly as it needs to.

active labour meditation

Close your eyes and bring your awareness to your breath.

Slow inhale.

Long exhale.

Pause.

Labour is becoming stronger now.

Your body is working more powerfully.

And you are meeting each surge with calm and focus.

Pause.

Each surge rises like an ocean wave.

You feel it build.

You breathe through the peak.

And then it gently fades away.

Pause.

As each wave rises, take a deep breath in.

Then slowly release the breath.

Soft.

Long.

Relaxed.

Pause.

Your breath is your anchor.

It guides you through each surge.

Keeping your body relaxed.

Keeping your mind calm.

Pause.

Relax your jaw.

Relax your shoulders.

Relax your hands.

active labour meditation

Soft jaw.

Soft shoulders.

Soft body.

Pause.

The softer you become, the more your body opens.

Your cervix continues to soften.

To stretch.

To open for your baby.

Pause.

Imagine your womb drawing upward with each surge.

Gently pulling your cervix open.

Helping your baby move down.

Pause.

Your baby is working with you.

Turning.

Descending.

Finding their way through your pelvis.

Pause.

Together you and your baby are creating birth.

Pause.

With each surge repeat silently:

I welcome this wave.

Pause.

My body opens for my baby.

Pause.

I breathe my baby down.

Pause.

Between each surge you return to calm.

active labour meditation

Your body rests.

Your baby rests.

Pause.

You might sway.

Rock your hips.

Lean forward.

Move in whatever way your body asks.

Your body knows the best positions for birth.

Pause.

Trust your instincts.

Trust the rhythm of labour.

Pause.

Each surge has a purpose.

Each surge brings your baby closer.

Pause.

You are strong.

You are focused.

You are birthing your baby.

transition meditation

Bring your attention to your breath.

Slow inhale.

Long exhale.

Pause.

Your body is working deeply now.

Transition is powerful.

But it is also the final stretch before meeting your baby.

Pause.

Each surge is strong because your body is so close to birthing.

Your baby is moving down.

Your body is opening fully.

Pause.

Even when things feel intense, your breath remains your guide.

Slow inhale.

Long exhale.

Pause.

Release tension from your jaw.

Allow your lips to soften.

Your mouth slightly open.

A relaxed mouth encourages an open body.

Pause.

Low sounds may come naturally.

Allow them.

Deep sounds help your body relax.

Pause.

Each surge rises.

Peaks.

And falls away again.

Just like every wave before it.

transition meditation

Pause.

You breathe through the peak.

Knowing it will pass.

Knowing your baby is coming.

Pause.

Remind yourself:

This is temporary.

Pause.

My baby is almost here.

Pause.

My body knows exactly what to do.

Pause.

You do not need to control birth.

You only need to follow your body's rhythm.

Pause.

Your womb is incredibly strong.

Working in perfect coordination.

Helping your baby move lower and lower.

Pause.

Imagine your baby descending through your pelvis.

Your body opening fully.

Making space.

Pause.

Between surges allow yourself to completely rest.

Your body gathers strength for the next wave.

Pause.

You are doing it.

You are birthing your baby.

Each breath brings you closer to meeting them.

down breathing & birth meditation

Take a slow breath in.

And release it gently.

Pause.

Your body may now feel the urge to bear down.

This is your body's natural reflex.

Your baby is ready to be born.

Pause.

As each surge begins, take a deep breath in.

Then slowly breathe your baby down.

Long breath out.

Directing your breath into your womb.

Pause.

Imagine your breath flowing down through your body.

Guiding your baby lower.

Helping your baby move through your pelvis.

Pause.

You may feel stretching.

Pressure.

Your baby's head moving closer to the world.

Pause.

Your body opens wider and wider.

Your baby turning and moving with each surge.

Pause.

You breathe deeply.

Slow inhale.

Long downward exhale.

down breathing & birth meditation

Pause.

With each breath imagine your baby moving closer to your arms.
Closer to your chest.

Closer to meeting you.

Pause.

Your body expands.

Your perineum stretching gently and safely.

Your baby emerging slowly.

Pause.

You are supported.

You are safe.

Your body knows exactly how to birth your baby.

Pause.

Feel the incredible strength within you.

The power of your womb.

The determination of your baby.

Pause.

One breath at a time.

One surge at a time.

Your baby is arriving.

Pause.

And soon you will feel the warm weight of your baby on your chest.

Your first breath together.

Your first moment together.

Pause.

Your baby is coming.

And you are doing beautifully.

Extra Affirmations:

"I can do anything for 60 seconds".

"This is intense, but I am stronger".

"I surrender".

"One contraction at a time".

"My body is built for birth, I can do this".

"I let go and allow my body to open".

"I open, I soften, I release."

"I am more powerful than I know."

"With every push, I am closer to holding my baby."

